Resumo

A música de dança no estilo francês circulou amplamente no século XVII, como se pode comprovar pela sua presença em fontes muito dispersas e de vários tipos, muitos dos quais foram criados para usos fora dos contextos de salão de baile (por exemplo, fontes de música para tecla). Em Inglaterra, cerca de 180 danças deste tipo foram publicadas sob o título «The Tunes of the Usual French Dances at Court and Dancing Schools» por John Playford, Zachariah Watkins e Henry Playford entre c.1662 e 1687, num suplemento ao The Dancing Master e ao seu sucessor, Apollo’s Banquet. A maioria das «danças francesas» destas publicações são desconhecidas fora das fontes inglesas e foram provavelmente compostas por mestres de dança e outros músicos associados com escolas de dança em Londres, embora seja possível comprovar que um número significativo tem origem francesa. O mercado para estas publicações era constituído por violinistas amadores. No entanto, a sua notação de pauta única (apenas uma melodia) é uma indicação de que foram extraídas directamente de fontes pertencentes a mestres de dança que usavam habitualmente esta forma de notação. O presente catálogo inclui todas as «danças francesas» identificáveis publicadas no The Dancing Master e no Apollo’s Banquet, até a edição de 1687 deste último, fornecendo incipits musicais e uma ampla variedade de concordâncias para cada melodia identificada. As fontes também são listadas alfabeticamente, acompanhadas por referências à literatura secundária, edições modernas, facsímiles publicados e reproduções digitais disponíveis on-line. Os incipits musicais são codificados numericamente, seguindo o sistema desenvolvido por Bruce Gustafson, que regista informações sobre os aspectos melódicos e rítmicos, permitindo uma consulta fácil e flexível do catálogo. Um índice contém separadamente os códigos em ordem numérica, de acordo com o género.

Abstract

French-style dance music circulated extensively in the seventeenth century, as reflected in its widely dispersed sources of various types, many of which were created for use outside of ballroom contexts (e.g. keyboard sources). In England over 180 such dances were published as ‘The Tunes of the Usual French Dances at Court and Dancing Schools’ by John Playford, Zachariah Watkins and Henry Playford between c.1662 and 1687 in a supplement to The Dancing Master and its successor, Apollo’s Banquet. Most of the ‘French Dances’ in these publications are unknown outside of English sources and were probably composed by dancing masters and other musicians associated with dancing schools in London, though a significant number are of demonstrably French origin. The intended market for these publications was amateur violinists. However, their single-line (melody-only) notation suggests they drew directly from sources belonging to dancing masters who habitually used this form of notation. The present catalogue includes all the identifiable ‘French Dances’ published in The Dancing Master and Apollo’s Banquet, up to and including the 1687 of the latter, providing musical incipits and identifying a wide range of concordances for each tune. The sources are also listed alphabetically, accompanied by references to secondary literature, modern editions, published facsimiles and digital reproductions available online. The musical incipits are encoded numerically following the system developed by Bruce Gustafson, which captures both melodic and rhythmic information while offering ease of use and flexibility. An index lists the codes separately in numerical order according to genre.

Introduction

THIS IS A CATALOGUE OF THE APPROXIMATELY 180 French-style dances published as melodies in a supplement to The Dancing Master (c. 1662–5) and its successor, Apollo’s Banquet (1669/70–87), by John Playford, Zachariah Watkins and Henry Playford.¹ Although lacking choreographic notation or descriptions, I have argued elsewhere that this music—given the generic title ‘French Dances’ in these editions—represents the repertoire of dancing masters and other musicians associated with dancing schools in London in the late seventeenth century.² Absence from foreign sources and some titles suggest many of the dances originated in England, though a significant number were, in fact, imported and represent part of a repertoire of French-style dance music that circulated widely. This international repertoire was often considered emblematic of French-style idioms fashionable throughout Europe in the late seventeenth century; musicians in several countries, including England, Portugal, and Spain, adopted it in various ways beyond the ballroom according to local needs, tastes and practices.³

¹ For their publication history, see Martha CURTI, ‘John Playford’s Apollo’s Banquet (1670)’ (Ph.D. dissertation, Rutgers University, 1977), pp. 97–122, and Peter MUNSTEDT, ‘John Playford, Music Publisher: A Bibliographical Catalogue’ (Ph.D. dissertation, University of Kentucky, 1983), pp. 220–1, 264–5, 324–5, 388–9, 400, 402, 417, and 422. Munstedt (p. 221) shows convincingly that the earliest Dancing Master supplement to survive must date from c. 1662 and not 1657 as was previously thought. I am grateful to Andrew Walkling for further advice on these editions.

For the parallel repertoire in French sources, which partially overlaps with the English one, see Meredith LITTLE and Carol G. MARSH, La Danse Noble. An Inventory of Dances and Sources (Stuyvesant, NY, Pendragon, 1992).

³ For the repertoire’s relationship to English music, see Andrew WOOLLEY, ‘French Dances and the Consort Dances of Matthew Locke and his English Contemporaries’, in Transitions in Mid-Baroque Music: Style, Genre and Performance, edited by Carrie Churnside (Woodbridge, Boydell and Brewer, forthcoming). For Portuguese and Spanish sources, see Andrew WOOLLEY, ‘From Arrangements to New Compositions: Seventeenth-century French Dance Music in Portuguese and Spanish Keyboard Sources to 1720’, De musica disserenda, 16/1 (2020), pp. 9–35.

The purpose of this catalogue is to record the printing history of each tune as well a wider range of concordances; it also facilitates the further identification of concordances by providing musical and numerical incipits. Its scope is defined by the organisation of the Dancing Master supplements and Apollo's Banquet, though some decisions have had to be made about what to include, especially due to occasional difficulties distinguishing them from the country dances (dances in non-French idioms) and theatre airs (airs composed for performance before and between the acts of Restoration plays) in the same sources. The French Dances are grouped together and are readily identifiable in the c. 1662 Dancing Master and in the first two editions of Apollo's Banquet; furthermore, the second edition of the latter gives them their own set of numbering with the heading 'The Tunes of the Usual French Dances at COURT and DANCING SCHOOLS' (similar headings appeared subsequently). In the 1665 Dancing Master, however, they appear in two groups among country dances under the heading 'The Tunes of the French Dances and other New Tunes for the TREBLE-VIOLIN', thus making it difficult to judge where they begin and end in this source. Two dances from the 1665 Dancing Master not grouped with its French Dances have also been incorporated into the catalogue: 'Duke of York's March.', which is apparently by the Parisian dancing master Jean Artus Leborgne, and 'A Chiconi.', later published among the French Dances in the first edition of Apollo's Banquet.

A similar ambiguity is found in the third part of the fifth edition of Apollo's Banquet. The French Dances are grouped together, but among them are several pieces by Thomas Farmer—a composer of theatre airs with no known connection to London dancing schools or venues—and 'A New Italian Ground.'; apart from the ground, they have been incorporated into the catalogue since they are indistinguishable stylistically from the French Dances.⁴ Five dances from outside the group of French Dances in the first edition of Apollo's Banquet—a corant, a canary and three others attributed to Lully (as 'Baptist')—have also been incorporated as possible French Dances.

Though the series continued into the early eighteenth century, the fifth edition of Apollo's Banquet (1687) was the last to include a significant quantity of new French Dances designated as such, unless in this edition they were substantially reprinted from the lost third and fourth editions (1682, 1684). French Dances presumably continued to be performed in ballroom settings, though by the time John Playford's son Henry came to issue Apollo's Banquet Newly Reviv'd (1701) it was no longer deemed necessary to include them in any great number, perhaps because their popularity had declined significantly among amateurs seeking music for recreation (the principal market for these editions) over the preceding decade.⁵ Few new French Dances were published in the 1690s: those of the second and third parts of the sixth, 1690 edition are reprinted from the second and third parts of the 1687 edition except for some reordering, avoidance of duplicates and minor changes (e.g. spellings of titles); additions consist of song tunes and country dances added to the third part only. Similarly, except for a piece called ‘Round O: A new French Dance.’, The First Book of Apollo’s Banquet... the 7th Edition (1693) (no corresponding second book is known to exist) contains no new French Dances.⁶

Sources

The sources for the French Dances published in The Dancing Master and Apollo’s Banquet are not only English, but also Dutch, French, German, Scottish, Spanish and Swedish, and thus demonstrate that some melodies were imported or circulated widely.⁷ The present catalogue cannot claim to have considered every potential foreign source, and while many tunes were probably composed in England in imitation of their French models, others may yet be found in foreign sources. I am grateful to Bruce Gustafson for drawing my attention to several concordances in non-English as well as English manuscripts, including some in sources I have not considered as a whole.⁸

There has also been no attempt to determine the number of English sources, though English manuscript tune books dating before c. 1690 and English keyboard sources of the period c. 1660–c. 1700 have been considered systematically; the latter illustrate the popularity within England of some tunes over others. The contents of English consort sources were consulted partly via indexes kindly made available to me by Peter Holman, while US-NH, Filmer MS 3, was consulted via incipits available from the RISM-OPAC database.⁹ It is likely that many of these dances were performed in arrangements for instrumental ensembles in ballroom contexts.¹⁰ However, surprisingly few concordances in English consort sources have come to light—there are more in French and German ones—and several that were considered as a whole have yielded none at all.¹¹

The following is a list of all the sources that appear in this catalogue, the locations of which are indicated using RISM sigla.¹²

[Title-page not extant]

This is the earliest supplement to The Dancing Master to survive, existing in only one exemplar. It is headed 'The TUNES of the French Dances and other New TUNES for the / TREBLE-VIOLIN' and consists of 56 numbered dances, the first 27 of which are identifiable as French Dances. The running header at the top of the page changes with the fifth gathering (sig. [N5]) to 'Select New Tunes and Jiggs for the Treble Violin.' This gathering includes French Dances 23-7 and is the part of the supplement where they end.

Editorial Policies, the Organisation of the Catalogue, and How to Use it

The dances are given in the order in which they appear in the editions, thus [1-27.] are from the c. 1662 Dancing Master, [28-53.] were first published in the 1665 Dancing Master, the earliest edition for [54-81.] is the first edition of Apollo's Banquet, and so on. However, the most recent edition of a melody, up to and including the fifth edition of Apollo's Banquet, is used as a musical incipit's copy-text, since later editions sometimes included corrections. An erroneous two-flat key-signature in the sources for [13.] has been ignored, but otherwise editorial interventions are confined to accidentals, shown small-sized, beaming and stem direction. If a double bar-line is present, representing the end of a strain, this is shown.

In transcribing titles, the original orthography, use of italics and punctuation (where present) is retained. All first letters are rendered in italic or roman type in accordance with what is used for the letters that immediately follow. Titles beginning with a word of more than one letter sometimes begin with two capital letters; these double capitals are ignored. The incipit titles are derived from the copy texts.

The catalogue entries contain the following: a title line, musical incipit, numerical incipit, and a source list. Each title is numbered and names the composer, if known, in square brackets, supplying where applicable work-list numbers from Herbert Schneider's Chronologisch-thematisches Verzeichnis sämtlicher Werke von Jean-Baptiste Lully (Tutzing, Schneider, 1981) (LWV) and Franklin Zimmerman's Henry Purcell 1659-1695: An Analytical Catalogue of his Music (London, Macmillan, 1963) (Z.); the key is defined as the key in which the music ends and is indicated in square brackets, using lower and upper case letters to distinguish minor and major (e.g. '[d]' = D minor; '[D]' = D major). Alternative titles and variants in the orthography and typography are recorded in the list of sources.

The musical incipits are between two and five bars long, depending on the metre and tempo; immediately below them are numerical incipits that follow the system developed and refined by Bruce Gustafson.¹⁷ The numerical incipits specify the metre ('2' for duple time, '3' for triple time), followed by a colon, then the incipit itself in which the degrees of the scale are represented by numbers, ignoring their relative pitch and treating major and minor, and any chromatically altered scale degrees, as equivalent (e.g. the tonic is '1', the supertonic is '2', the major or minor third degree is '3', and so on). For the several pieces apparently beginning in a different key to the one they start in (e.g. [12.]), two versions of the numerical incipit are given. In cases where a tune has multiple sections in different metres, each new section is given its own numerical incipit, preceded by a semicolon, the bar number and an indication of the metre. The spaces between the numbers represent the bar-lines and therefore show the rhythmic structure. To facilitate identification, any canaries, chaconnes, minuets and sarabands notated in 6/4 have their numerical incipits given in 3/4, while some simplified coded incipits that ignore certain kinds of ornamental figuration have been incorporated (e.g. in bar 1 of [46.]). Tied notes are counted as a single note. As well as appearing under the musical incipits, the encoded incipits are indexed in a numerical order following the main part of the catalogue.

The single-line prints as well as the related English manuscript tune books give variant versions of the openings of some of the melodies; these variant versions have been recorded in a second numerical incipit (e.g. for [37.]), in order to assist searches. However, it is recommended that other parts of an incipit besides its opening are searched, since variants can potentially disguise the existence of a concordance.¹⁸ If the opening does not yield a result, the approach to a distinctive interval, such as a fourth or a fifth, or the intervals immediately preceding the first cadence, may be tried. This is often likely to produce a large list of results, but a search pane can be used to identify melodies with a particular metre and rhythmic structure. In Adobe Acrobat Reader DC or PDF-XChange Viewer, the search pane can be brought up with the command CTRL+SHIFT+F. Once a potential concordance is recognised the original source may be checked with reference to the online reproductions, modern and facsimile editions listed above.

The source lists for each tune specify the editions of The Dancing Master and Apollo's Banquet in which it appears, up to and including the fifth edition of the latter (1687), using the abbreviations given in the list above. Other sources are listed under 'Also' in the following order: manuscript English tune books; non-English sources; other English sources. If a single-source modern edition exists for one of the manuscript sources, this is indicated in abbreviated form with a reference to the piece or page number in the edition; full citations are given above under 'Sources'. References are given where further sources are known but not cited.¹⁹
